

The Mail Never Lies

If paperwork is starting to pile up, it's not just clutter. It's a picture into how well a person's cognitive and life management abilities are functioning.

Managing mail requires...

- ▶ Decision-making
- ▶ Focus
- ▶ Memory
- ▶ Task completion

These are often the first functions to decline quietly, so it's important to pay attention to the signs.

What You See

What It Means

- Stacks of unopened mail
- Bills mixed with junk mail
- Late notices
- Papers in odd locations
- Partially written checks or bills
- Feeling overwhelmed or avoiding tasks
- Loss of prioritization skills
- Financial management breakdown
- Disorganization or cognitive drift
- Executive function fatigue

Home Care Helps

- ✓ Observing subtle changes in routine, behavior, and safety that others may miss.
- ✓ Supporting activities of daily living, such as meals, hygiene, and mobility.
- ✓ Noticing patterns of missed medications, poor nutrition, or confusion.
- ✓ Providing structure and consistency to reduce feeling overwhelmed.
- ✓ Serving as the eyes and ears for families who can't be there every day.

If capacity is changing, it's time
for an intervention!

Let's talk about how we can step in early and simplify daily life before problems escalate.
